Tell us why. Accuse us of anything. The answers are the same: We have more problems than the rights of the Hawaiian people. In 1978, we called for a Hawaiian homeland. In 1992, we called for a Hawaiian state. In 1998, we called for a Hawaiian constitution. In 2000, we called for the establishment of a Hawaiian nation. But what is the path to achieve these goals? The answer is: We need a movement that will put the rights of the Hawaiian people first. We need a movement that will put the rights of the Hawaiian people first.

Fighting Hawaiian Discrimination

The Hawaiian Homes Commission was established in 1921 to provide land for Native Hawaiians. However, the commission has faced criticism for discriminatory practices. In 1999, a class-action lawsuit was filed against the commission, alleging discrimination against Native Hawaiians.

Business as Usual

Despite the criticism, the commission continues to operate. In 2002, the commission announced that it would provide $5 million in financial assistance to Native Hawaiians.

Misfits

The commission has faced criticism for its practices. In 2003, a report was released by the Hawaiian Legal Aid Society, alleging that the commission has discriminated against Native Hawaiians. The commission denied the allegations, stating that it provides services to all beneficiaries, regardless of their race.

Future of Hawaiian Land

The Hawaiian Homes Commission is facing a critical decision in 2004. The commission must decide whether to continue providing land to Native Hawaiians or to transition to a state-run program. The decision could have a significant impact on the future of Hawaiian land.
